Acknowledgements

To my family: Thank you for your support and love. You lift me up every day!

I would like to once again express my deepest gratitude to Cathleen Weigelt-Ferguson – German teacher at Fort Zumwalt East High School, St. Peters, Missouri. Her time, patience, insight and abilities are boundless. Without her contributions, this book would not have been possible.

I also wish to thank Cathleen Weigelt-Ferguson's students for their contributions and comments during the editing and review of the book.

I wish to thank Brigitte Kahn – German/French teacher at Massapequa School District, Massapequa, NY for her contributions, comments and encouragement. I am always grateful for her support.

I am also indebted to all those not mentioned by name. Your ideas, wisdom and input help make this book possible. I thank you all.

Overview and Setup of this Resource Guide

This resource guide is intended to be used with “Die Suche nach ...”. It does not require that you use a specific method or approach in your classroom. Use it when and how you see fit to match your personal approach to the classroom and your students.

The guide is divided by chapter. Each chapter has a list of vocabulary words, structures and/or phrases. This vocabulary is defined and an example of the word, structure and/or phrase is given in context. The examples are taken directly from the corresponding chapter in “Die Suche nach ...”, so that the students can see how the vocabulary is used in context directly from the reading. Moreover, the vocabulary is listed in the order that it appears in the chapter.

The vocabulary in each chapter is not an exhaustive list. (There is a complete vocabulary list in the back of “Die Suche nach ...”) The vocabulary found in this guide is lower frequency and it is also the “troublesome” vocabulary as identified by various groups of students through the editing and revision process. The vocabulary lists in the guide are designed to make “troublesome” vocabulary easily accessible and quickly referenced. The intent is that the student does not need to interrupt the flow of reading (longer) by referencing the complete vocabulary list in the back of the book in these cases.

Tip: The lists can be printed or projected for each chapter as you work through it.

For many of the chapters you will find a section for further resources after the vocabulary section. These sections are included to help illustrate and facilitate geography, culture, events, historical figures, discussions and other lessons. There are also resources that do not necessarily deal with the theme/topic of the book, but they are included as possible enrichment and extension activities – particularly to help students with vocabulary. Furthermore, at the end of the guide you will see a section with a further list of resources, websites and videos over the Amber Room and related themes.

Again, there is no right or wrong way to utilize this guide and it does not require that you use a specific method or approach in your classroom. Use this guide and these resources as a starting point and incorporate them with other resources, activities and lessons as you see best.

Tip: When you finish the book, have your students make a timeline of the Amber Room. Additionally, you can have them research theories about what happened to the Amber Room and places where it could be hidden. Also, depending on the comfort level of you and your students, you can look more into the “Curse of the Amber Room”.

In the end, the hope is that this guide will help you meet not only your students’ needs, but also your own needs and teaching style. May your students find enjoyment in reading the “Die Suche nach ...” and any subsequent discussions and activities.

Although the Erzgebirge (Ore Mountains) are not specifically mentioned in the book, they are not far from Chemnitz. If you choose, you can introduce this region as a separate topic of discussion. This region – originally shaped by the mining industry - is famous for its beauty and traditions. Again, these visuals and videos are included for enrichment and further discussions.
